Budapest—Slovakian-Hungarian fighting breaks out again in border controversy.

MADRID, Mar. 28—Presaging early termination of the Spanish Civil War, Madrid surrendered today to the victorious troops of Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

The capital capitulation came today when the general headquarters of the crumpled Madrid Defense Council announced that the special army, acting under orders, had bowed before the superior fighting of Franco's legions.

With the horror of 32 months of warfare at an end, Madrid took on a changed aspect as if some all-powerful practitioner had suddenly hypnotized the entire city.

Thousands of people—many of whom had grown accustomed to the Communist clinched fist—began using the Fascist salute.

Nationalist forces advanced on the center of the city from the West, meeting with but scant resistance from scattered groups of Republicans.

Turn To New Jersey In Poison Ring Probe

PHILADELPHIA, March 28—Two homicide detectives left for Hampton, N. J., indicating they planned to investigate a report that two deaths there had been connected with the insurance poisoning for which Herman Petrillo was convicted last week.

They conferred with Assistant District Attorney Vincent P. McDevitt just before leaving, but he refused to discuss the report.

The suspected victims of what Commonwealth investigators have called a three-State conspiracy to kill for insurance were said to be a father and a son. Insurance totaling $10,000 was reported paid when they died.

Milton S. Leidner, counsel for Petrillo, meantime filed written motions for a new trial. Petrillo was found guilty last week of first degree murder. The jury decreed death in the electric chair.

Locates Relatives; Hadn't Heard From Them Since '81

EDGELEY, Mar. 28—William Edward Everett, colored, well known here as "Kentucky Bill," of the "Buffalo Bill Farm," and who travelled with the Barnum & Bailey Circus for years, was apparently alone in the world until last week he wrote to the postmaster in Glasgow, Kentucky, asking if he could possibly tell him where relatives of Everett might be located. Everett had heard nothing from relatives since 1881, having lost all contact with them while traveling with the circus.

The postmaster answered, giving addresses of two sisters, one in Louisville, Ky., another in New Albany, Ind., a brother in Cincinnati, O., and another in Springfield, N. J.

"Kentucky" immediately wrote to his relatives, getting replies already from his two sisters, and a neighbor is going to take him to Springfield, N. J., Sunday, to see his brother.

"Kentucky" has many friends in Edgeley, and can tell many tales about the circus.

He is so happy about finding his relatives after 58 years that he tells all he meets.

ANTICIPATE SHAKE-UP IN STATE RELIEF SET-UP

Harold H. Baer, Uniontown, Fayette Co.'s Administrator, Fired for Political Activity

RUSSELL STARTS DUTIES

HARRISBURG, Mar. 28—(INS)—A drastic shakeup in the State's relief set-up was anticipated today in the wake of public assistance Secretary Howard L. Russell's dismissal of Fayette County's acting relief administrator, Harold H. Baer, Uniontown, for "political activity."

Russell fired Baer on the basis of evidence "indicating political activity in violation of the public assistance laws." He threatened to "take some action" in any county where he "ran across any dirt."

At the same time, Russell disclosed that he has followed the dictates of an opinion rendered by Attorney General Claude T. Reno "on the basis of an emergency now existing," delegating Russell to "exercise the powers and duties of county boards of public assistance, pending confirmation of boards by the Senate."

Russell said he has taken over the functions of county boards in all but five counties and has named personal representatives to exercise the functions of county boards in Philadelphia, Allegheny, Lackawanna, Luzerne and Schuylkill counties. Assistance board members in Crawford, Union, Monroe, Milford and Mercer counties, Russell said, continue to operate inasmuch as they were not dismissed by Gov. Arthur H. James.

Russell pointed out that the "real reason" he has taken charge is to "keep the job running and to keep an eye on things." He denied that he has been given dictatorial powers over the relief set-up or that relief had been centralized in him.

"The whole set-up must continue to follow the set-up of county boards," Russell said. "I am temporarily executing the duties of county boards, in conformance with state laws regulating those duties, and on an emergency basis."

Those named to function as one-man county relief boards and to supervise matters of personnel were:

Robert G. Glenn, Harrisburg, for Philadelphia county; James Keating, Phila., for Schuylkill county; John H. Small, Scranton, for Lackawanna and Luzerne counties; and Paul G. Wassman, Harrisburg, for Allegheny.

Edwin Moore, Danville, was appointed by Russell as acting executive director in Fayette County "until such time as a new board is confirmed and takes over its responsibilities."

Dismissal of Baer was believed to be a throwback to last Fall's bitter general election campaign. Sen. Anthony Cavalcante, Fayette Democrat, charged many county assistance board employees and relief recipients were being maced. Russell himself declared that it was "just by accident" that the Fayette situation came to light, but other administration spokesmen admitted that the macing charge was largely involved.

What Do You Say?

(By "The Stroller")

Bucks County's marrying 'squire, to whose home are attracted annually hundreds of young lovers, bent on becoming one, really doesn't mean to be discouraging, but it appears that way if one can judge by the sign directing those who pass along State Road to his office.

The neatly-painted sign pointing down the narrow thoroughfare which leads off of State Road informs those bound for the marriage vows: "James Laughlin, Justice, End of Road." And after the glamour of the honeymoon, when bills, taxes, unemployment, and countless other worries arise, many begin to feel that way about marriage—"end of road."

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Apparently having lost his balance while leaning from a window on the second floor of the residence occupied by his parents, Peter Force, aged about three years, fell to the ground, but escaped serious injury.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Force, parents of the child, occupy a house on the George C. Widney property, about two miles north of Chalfont, and during the afternoon the child accompanied his mother to the second floor while she was cleaning a room.

A short time after she started work Mrs. Force missed the child, and looking from the window, saw the child standing in the lawn below. She found that the child had suffered only a bump over the left eye.

Charged with robbing the Campbell service station on Trenton avenue, Morrisville, two men were committed to the Bucks County Jail by Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan in default of $1,500 bail each.

Officer Lebeberg arrested Owen Kettnerburgh, 21, of Canal street, Yardley, when he became suspicious of him and a companion lurking near Steward's service station, Bridge street and Delmor Avenue. The companion escaped amid revolver shots but was later arrested near his home. He identified himself as Lynn Dougherty, 24, of Harper Avenue, Yardley.

When arrested, Kettnerburgh had in his possession, according to police, a .22 calibre revolver which was identified as having been stolen from the Campbell station early yesterday. The station was robbed of $150 in cash and a quantity of candy.

Kettnerburgh, following questioning, revealed the identity of his companion, and Officer Andrew Thompson hurried to Yardley and took Dougherty into custody.

WANTS RIVER DIKE MADE 2 FEET LOWER

Representative Stockham Says $140,000 Could Have Been Saved On The Project

HE PROTESTED AT TIME

MORRISVILLE, Mar. 28—After fighting for more than a year to keep the State Department of Forests and Waters from building the dike to its present height along the Morrisville side of the Delaware River between the two bridges, Assemblyman Thomas B. Stockham has introduced a bill in the State Legislature which he hopes will finally put the dike at a sensible height.

Assemblyman Stockham was the sponsor of the original bill which appropriated $110,000 with which to build the dike. He says the work could have been accomplished with that sum had the engineers not insisted on building it to such an "outlandish" height. A sum of $250,000 has already been expended on the work and an additional sum of $10,000 is being asked to finish the work in the arches under the Lincoln Highway.

Assemblyman Stockham said that had the engineers taken from the river bed the stone used in the wall, thousands of dollars could have been saved and the river bed improved. Some of the stone used in the dike was brought here from a distance of about 45 miles. More than 700 perch of stone could also have been saved had the wall been kept at a sensible height, Stockham asserted.

The dike in its present height is three feet higher than the crest of the 1938 flood and still higher than the crest of the 1903 flood. It is also two feet higher than the canal and, according to Stockham, the river never was high enough for water to go over the canal bank.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

In Justice To Henry

Washington, March 27. A GOOD deal of criticism has been poured upon the sparsely covered but devoted head of Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., since he became Secretary of the Treasury. Various writers have referred to him in disparaging terms. Not infrequently he has been called a Yes Man and there has been a general disposition to treat him lightly.

AT no time since he entered public life has he had a really good press, and certainly he lacks that facility in proclaiming his own virtues which some of his Cabinet colleagues possess to so marked a degree. All of which seems to make it incumbent to do Mr. Morgenthau justice now that he appears to be taking a stand which requires both courage and character. Long before the phrase "business appeasement," which so irritates Mr. Roosevelt and inflames his radical advisers of the Leon Henderson type, was used at all and months before the modest Mr. Hopkins began advertising himself as the businessman's friend, Mr. Morgenthau and his energetic aide, Mr. John Hanes, were working upon a tax-revision program the primary purpose of which was to stimulate business and promote recovery. There is not the slightest question that Mr. Roosevelt was fully apprised of their work and views.

NOR is there the least doubt that they strongly felt he approved of the one and was in accord with the other. They were in close touch with the President and in frequent conference with him on the subject.

A PROSPECT THAT PLEASES

This is the time of year when the ardent gardener will begin to concern himself with the problems that lie in the offing. He will experience, to begin with, an urge to get out in the yard with a rake, but determining in his own mind upon due consideration that it is a little too early for practical operations, he will devote himself to the theory of the business.

In his mind's eye the garden of the Spring and Summer will assume form. First, of course, there will be the gay army of tulips, a beautiful prelude to a changing and ever-thrilling pageant. Then the annuals and perennials will make their appearance. Running along the back of the bed will be the tall-growing cosmos and room will be found, of course, for the old stand-bys, zinnias, and for asters and scabiosa, ageratum, calendula and larkspur, petunias and marigold, snapdragon and countless other flowers, all depending upon the individual fancy of the gardener.

And if this gardener has the proper spirit, if he knows his verbenas, his salpiglossis and his plox drummondii, he will have each in its place, a spot where the soil is just right and where there is the ideal distribution of sunshine and shade. The whole plan will be put down carefully on paper in anticipation of the day when conditions call for the use of spade and rake and hoe, when the plan will be transferred from paper to the good earth.

Of course, there is no certainty that enthusiasm for the perfect garden will not diminish as the season advances and the scene changes from the realm of the imagination to the realities of the back yard. Nevertheless, it is a pleasant prospect to contemplate.

FAVORABLE BUSINESS SIGNS

Everybody wants "good business." The average state of mind is important. We think it is a war-ranted "bracer" to mark at the beginning of a week the favorable signs reported at the end of one. Constructive factors cited in Saturday's news formed into an impressive list:

"Favorable developments in the foreign situation . . . the efforts of the Administration to reassure business . . . soundness of inventories in leading lines . . . a spurt in automobile production believed to be the forerunner of the industry's drive to sell cars . . . steel operations hit a new high . . . bank clearings exceeded the comparative total of the preceding year for the ninth consecutive time . . . building operations at a good rate with expectations of further gains."

The general indices must rise a long way to reach the 1937—much farther to reach the 1929—levels, but after so many setbacks, such a long pull for nearly 10 years, the promising indications are apt to be underestimated unless they are adequately marked. The near future appears brighter than it has any time since the fall of 1937. The remaining possibility of war in Europe is the chief danger now.

This is an age of reevaluation, with the revaluers cutting idols of the past down to midsize and making Jesse James out to be a sweet boy.

Britain's newest and toughest man o' war is clad with armor 16 inches thick, and all we hope is that no reef runs aground on it.

Let. Up to a few weeks ago everything he said or did, with the exception of the Amile appointment, seemed to prove that he shared with them a desire to encourage business so far as it could be done without stultification. The Hopkins speech and the President's announcement that he had no further reform or regulatory legislation to offer fitted in with the Treasury tax-revision program.

IN FACT, everything was lovely until the young radicals of the "inner circle" began to prod the President with the hideous suggestions that he was "letting the people down," "betraying the common man," "making concessions to capital" and other of their stock barbs which always have so potent an effect upon Mr. Roosevelt. Efforts along this line were successful enough to renew in him a desire to demonstrate to the "intellectual liberals" that his "heart is still in the right place." Accordingly, at a press conference last week he staged a demonstration, caustically commented upon "well-meaning persons" who thought they could help recovery by revising taxes and promoting economy.

THEN, although he previously had impressed Senator Harrison with his wish to co-operate in modifying the taxes which particularly hamper business, he followed this up with the pithy remark that tax revision was Mr. Harrison's responsibility, not his. Some New Deal journalists immediately interpreted this as meaning that "business appeasement" was "out the window." Others asserted that the President never intended to make concessions and that his attitude has never changed. From less partisan sources it was pointed out that he seemed to have left Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Hanes out on a limb and to have made a monkey out of Mr. Hopkins.

IT was strongly hinted that Mr. Morgenthau now would "curl up like a lettuce leaf" and the report was printed that Mr. Hanes, discouraged and disgusted, would resign. Neither of these things has happened—or, so it is said, will happen. Instead of curling up and saying "Yes, yes, Mr. President," Mr. Morgenthau is sticking to his guns. He proposes to go straight ahead with his tax-revision program. He proposes to co-operate with Senator Harrison, and neither he nor Mr. Hanes has weakened in the least.

THEY are proceeding in the conviction that the President meant what he said to them. They are proceeding in the belief that the press conference outburst was temperamental and that now it is over he remains convinced that the Treasury program is sound and right. Neither will get out, change his position or lose zest for the program until directly told to desist by the President personally. Those who are in position to know say that Mr. Morgenthau is quite clear as to what he is doing.

THERE is no man in the Cabinet more loyal to the President than he. Nevertheless, he does not propose to be switched from his publicly proclaimed convictions because the radicals have induced Mr. Roosevelt to express himself unwisely. His self-respect is involved and he is going ahead until Mr. Roosevelt assumes full responsibility for stopping what he started. Neither he nor Mr. Hanes is sulking or sore. Neither is going to resign. Both know that from now on the palace politicians will campaign against them, but they propose to assume that the President is a man of sincerity who does not go back on loyal friends because lies are told about them. In other words, they will stick until convinced that this assumption is not well based.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

SYNOPSIS

It was just prior to the World War that young Dr. Chris Arden started in private practice. He found it hard enough to gain patronage; lack of funds also hampered him. His uncle, Dave Mortimer, an old country doctor who educated Chris, would like him for an assistant, but the young doctor prefers to make his own way. He rents a room and office from the shiftless Walters family. This he soon regretted, but sympathy for inefficient Henry Walters and his meek wife, Lily, caused him to stay with him. And as he thought of their lazy 17-year-old daughter, Kate, and ne'er-do-well son, Dick, that sympathy increased. Shortly after Chris hangs out his sign, Beverly Lewis, daughter of the richest man in town, brings her dog to him to have a bone removed from its throat. She leaves in anger when he refuses a fee. Following her meeting with Chris, Beverly chides her suitor, wealthy Jerry Ames for being a wastrel. If he goes off in a fury when she tells him she does not love him. . . . Chris has a hard time making ends meet that spring and summer. Then, one day, he is summoned to the Lewis home to attend a servant. Next morning, Chris is surprised to receive an invitation to tea from Beverly. Mrs. Lewis likes Chris and sees in him a prospective son-in-law. The Lewis family takes a trip abroad. While they are away a typhoid epidemic afflicts their home town. Most of the victims are workers at Lewis' plants, the mill houses of which had neither city water, nor sewage. Chris is furious with Lewis for allowing such conditions. Finally, Henry Walters contracts the fever and dies. Chris realizes that Lily and Kate are now solely dependent on him. Katie is secretly in love with Chris. Following the death of Dr. Bergman, head surgeon at the hospital, Chris is appointed to the surgical staff. Returning home from a celebration in his honor, Chris picks up a stray dog which he names "Caesar." Shortly after Beverly's return from abroad, Chris meets her, but the happiness of the moment is crowded out by thoughts of her father's responsibility for the epidemic. He expresses his indignation to Beverly and, when she leaves, he regrets that, realizing that the girl is not to blame, Beverly quarrels with her father for his negligence. Two weeks later, she visits the mayor on a mysterious mission and emerges with a victorious air. The mayor, following her, says: "I've got a sneaking idea, Beverly, that you're putting something over on the old man."

CHAPTER XII

The two weeks had changed Chris. He was still fighting for sheer survival, walking to save carfare, and collecting far less than he needed, although he now had a practice of sorts. He was irritable and impatient. He would come in banging the front door behind him, and Katie, reading as usual in the cluttered dining room, would cock an ear and listen.
"He'll break the glass in that door yet."
He put Beverly out of his mind in those days, or at least thought he did, and began to read surgery with a vengeance.
Then one day in the office, examining a heart with his stethoscope, he heard the telephone and let it ring for some time before he answered it. When he did, an irritable voice at the other end announced that it was speaking from the Mayor's office, and that His Honor the Mayor himself and no less would like to see Doctor Arden that afternoon at three o'clock.
"What about?" said Chris forthrightly.
"He didn't say," said the voice with dignity.
Chris went back to his heart, puzzled but not excited, and at three o'clock he found himself in a crowded anteroom in the Municipal Building. It was almost four o'clock before his turn came to enter the august presence. Chris, with some calls to make, stalked into the inner office uncomprehendingly and glared at the man behind the desk, a heavy gentleman with an unctuous smile and a penetrating eye.
"My name's Arden. I believe you wanted to see me."

The Mayor nodded. "Sit down, Doctor. Yes, I sent for you. The fact is, we need another city physician, and you've been suggested for the job."
Chris looked hard at him across the desk. His mind, working quickly, was analyzing both man and offer. The Mayor, he knew, was largely a figurehead. The city was run by the local machine, and the head of that machine was Staunton Lewis.
"Where does that offer come from?" he inquired.
"It's not an offer yet, Doctor. I sent for you to talk it over."
"Well, the suggestion then. If it's from Staunton Lewis or any of his crowd—"
The Mayor sat forward and lost some of his unctious. "Look here, Doctor," he said. "I don't know anything about you personally, or just why you resent Mr. Lewis. We need another city physician. We pay a hundred dollars a month, and if you don't want to talk about it, there are about a thousand other young medical men who will. That's flat, and that's all."
"All I am asking," said Chris still stubbornly, "is how the lightning came to strike me, Mr. Mayor. It's a good offer, of course."
The Mayor was somewhat mollified. His full name was Barney O'Neill, and being what he was, he rather liked a fighter.
"Well, I don't mind telling you that. We hear more things here than maybe you think we do, and one of them was the way you carried on during the typhoid epidemic. If you can work like that for nothing, you ought to work like hell for twelve hundred a year!"
Chris relaxed. He was not being subsidized by Lewis and his crowd then, and the money would be a godsend. He grinned across the desk.
"That's different," he said. "Am I to take it that it is still a suggestion, or is it an offer?"
"It's an offer."
"Then I'll take it."

Shortly after Chris left, Beverly breathlessly entered the Mayor's office, to find him there alone, still grinning over his cigar. He jumped to offer her a chair, but she waved it away.
"I'm not staying," she said. "Did he take it?"
"He did. But I wish I knew what it is all about. Beverly, I can tell you this: There'd be the devil to pay if he knew. He's a suspicious young pup."
"I've told you why, Barney."
He reached over and put a hand over hers as it lay on the desk. "All I'm saying, Beverly, is don't get interested in him. He's got a hate on your father for some reason or other, and a man's a fool to do a thing like that."
She colored. "I like to pay my debts, Barney."
"Well, if that's all it is, you've done it. But don't fall in love with him. A girl's a fool to marry a doctor anyhow; out at all hours, sitting by other women's beds, and holding their hands—"
She laughed unexpectedly. "You saw him. Does he look like a hand holder?"
"Every man's a hand holder when he gets a chance," said the Mayor grimly.
Chris walked home on air that afternoon. He was conscious of a vast relief, and of something more, of recognition. He went home with a new confidence, only to find Lily in tears. He bent over and put a hand on her shoulder. It was shockingly thin, and shaking now with suppressed sobs.
"It doesn't do any good, you know, my dear. Boys are like that. You'll hear something before long."
"It's not Dick," she said astonishedly. "It's Katie."
She became hysterical after that, but at last he had the whole story. Katie lately had taken to going out at night, and the night before she had gone out to dance and had not come back.
"Why didn't you tell me?"
"I didn't know what you'd think."
"Better give me a list of the people she knows, and I'll look them up. Where was this dance last night?"
The next four hours were a nightmare. At first he was more irritated than apprehensive; but as the evening wore on he became increasingly anxious. He found the girl with whom she had gone to the dance hall, but during the evening the two had become separated, and Katie had disappeared.

"Was she drinking?"
"She's no drinker, but she'd had one or two, Doctor."
There was nothing to be learned at the hall either. The proprietor shrugged his shoulders.
"We have maybe a hundred girls here in an evening," he said. "And we run a decent place. You can ask the police."
He left the hall, however, with one clue, and ominous enough it sounded. A waiter remembered that a girl answering Katie's description had felt sick and dizzy, and that a middle-aged woman had taken her out to the dressing room. Neither woman nor girl, so far as he knew, had come back.
Chris went out onto the street again and stood there uncertainly. And then he remembered Bessie Smith. She was no angel of light, was Bessie; but she knew her half world well, and she might be able to help.
Nevertheless he felt rather absurd when at last he confronted her, and she eyed him quizzically.
"Well, Doctor, are you visiting us professionally? Or have you brought the cuff links?"
"I've brought the links, Bessie."
"What's the trouble?"
"It's not mine. Somebody else. A girl."
He told her then, and she listened carefully.
"I need help, Bessie. And I rather think it's your sort of help."
She looked at him. Her eyes, tall as he was, were almost level with his.
"I might telephone around," she said after a moment's hesitation. "After all, you made a good job of me when I looked like a hamburger steak; and treated me like a human being at that. If you're interested in this girl—"
"She's my landlady's daughter, that's all."
She left him abruptly and went up the stairs, the treads creaking under her weight. It was a half hour before she reappeared, her face as inscrutable as ever.
"Found her," she said laconically. "But don't get any wrong ideas in your head, Doctor. She's all right. Friend of mine saw she'd had too much to drink and took her home to sleep it off."
He got up. He was slightly dizzy with fatigue and hunger, but also with relief. "Thanks, Bessie. I'll go and get her."
"You'll do nothing of the kind," said Bessie brusquely. "You'll go home and wait for her. You've got my word of honor that she'll come, and that's enough."
He was both hungry and disgusted, as with the stealth of a burglar he entered the house that night, and he was shivering with cold in the dark front office when at last he heard hesitating steps on the pavement, and a key cautiously inserted in the front door. He waited until the door had opened and closed again. Then he spoke very quietly.
"Katie, come in here, please."
She did not move. She stood where she was, a small dark shadow with a whitish blotch above it which was her face. Then she made a quick move toward the door again, and he reached her just in time to prevent her escape. He caught her by the arm and jerked her into the room, closing the door after her and turning on the light switch.
"You silly little fool," he said furiously. "Do you know where you've been? And what I got you out of?" In his raw anger he shook her. "What business is it of mine to hunt the dives of this town for you? I've got something better to do."
"You got me out? Oh, God."
He looked at her. Her face was swollen with crying, her eyes terrified, almost desperate. He released her arm and took a turn around the room.
"Get this," he said, "and get it now. I promised your father to look after you, and I've tried to do it. But I've about reached the end, and tonight has finished me."

ON THE SCREENS

BRISTOL
Romance takes to the highway on a cross-country journey with a laugh for every mile. That is a thumb-nail description of RKO Radio's "Next Time I Marry," sprightly offering which opens today at the Bristol Theatre.

Lucille Ball, fast becoming one of the screen's top flight comedienne, is teamed with James Ellison and Lee Bowman. The former pair's antics as a pair of kissless newlyweds with divorce as their cherished goal supply an abundance of screen-fun. Bowman, as a titled foreigner, aids and abets the merriment.

The amusing story deals with a tempestuous heiress who impulsively marries a handsome young relief-worker in order to qualify for an inheritance. The entire deal is a business proposition, with the young man promising to permit an immediate divorce so the bride can marry her fiancé, the nobleman.

But through a series of unlooked-for complications, the wild scheme backfires and launches a mad race to Reno, with the bride and groom each vowing to obtain a divorce first. To keep Miss Ball from winning, Ellison holds her prisoner in his auto-trailer and heads for the Nevada town, with feverish newspaper reporters, the girl's relatives, police and the dismaying nobleman in hot pursuit. It is all a merry mixup, especially when the captive heiress finds herself actually falling in love with her hired husband who believes she is a contemptible double-crosser.

RITZ

There are no boundary lines in the matter of love and laughter, and Hollywood is proving it again. We have some advance news for you about a clever new picture that illustrates the theory in story and song.

At the Ritz Theatre today you will see "The Girl Downstairs," starring Franciska Gaal, the celebrated Continental beauty, with Franchot Tone and a brilliant cast of supporting players. Miss Gaal has appeared on the American screen only twice before, in "The Buccaneer" and "Paris Honeymoon."

In Europe she is acknowledged to be foremost among actresses. She scored in the theatre in plays ranging from Shakespeare's "Lady Macbeth" to Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion." In the two years in which she has been in America she has won acclaim as a radio star and in the movies.

No "cowboy from Brooklyn" is Gene Autry. He was born on a ranch, and educated in the best ranch traditions. Thus, upon swinging a lariat or yodeling a cowboy ballad, his performance has the golden touch of authenticity that is responsible largely for his phenomenal rise to fame.

Autry, whose latest picture, "Rhythm of the Saddle," is now showing at the Ritz Theatre, was born in Tioga, Texas, in 1907. He learned to ride while learning to walk, and spent his childhood rounding up great herds of steers, which had almost returned to a state of aboriginal wildness.

GRAND

Time was when the clatter of horses' hooves over the dusty trails of the West and the bark of the six-gun were the only accompaniments of banditry in this country. But today the roar of the motor is as much an adjunct to outlawry as is the stutter of tommy-guns.

In fact, gasoline plays a larger role than gunpowder in the latest story of big-scale crime. Universal's "Pirates of the Skies" which comes to the Grand Theatre today, "The Pirates" employ high-powered autos and high-speed planes in the execution of their robberies.

Daladier Moves Swiftly

Paris, Mar. 28—Premier Daladier moved swiftly today to strengthen his diplomatic and military position in preparation for the reply he is scheduled to deliver tomorrow to Premier Mussolini's demands upon France.

As the Italo-French quarrel over Africa and the Mediterranean vantage points approached a climax, the French ministerial council spurred to action by Daladier ordered increase in the French navy's personnel to a virtual wartime level. This was done, it was believed, to improve Daladier's position in future negotiations with Italy, and to offset the already heavy war preparations undertaken by France.

Meanwhile all France waited anxiously for Daladier's reply to the speech Mussolini made in Rome Sunday, outlining Italy's demand.

Madrid Surrenders;
War Nearing End

Spokesmen for Franco's high command announced that formal occupation of the capital would begin at noon, eastern standard time.

Julian Besteiro, Minister of the Interior in the short-lived Madrid defense junta, was the only responsible Republican leader remaining in the city. He stuck to his post at army headquarters presumably to negotiate with the Nationalist commanders upon their arrival.

tion of a stiffening German attitude toward Poland on the Danzig issue abounded today as the Reich's thunderous propaganda machine was turned upon Warsaw.

Belief immediately arose that Chancellor Hitler may be preparing for a sudden showdown on the free city of Danzig and the Polish Corridor.

Reports of large-scale Polish military preparations brought no direct comment other than denials, but the inspired German press and official statements assume a tone markedly similar to that used against Prague before the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia.

Nazi press dispatches claimed that German women and children in the Polish Corridor had been beaten for speaking their own language—and a semi-official pronouncement voiced the German Government's "amazement" at this.

Wants River Dike
Made 2 Feet Lower

As soon as he learned that the State engineers proposed to build the dike 32 feet high, Assemblyman Stockham voiced his objections with the officials in the State Department of Forests and Waters but they turned a deaf ear to his pleadings. After the Republicans were elected at the last election and took over the State government in January, Stockham decided to try other means to reduce the height of the wall and introduced a bill in the State Legislature.

The bill provides for cutting off two feet from the height of the dike at the upper bridge and tapering it down to a cut of five feet at the lower bridge. This will leave the dike 30 feet at the upper bridge and 27 feet at the lower bridge. The wall is now 32 feet high at both bridges.

THE CHIEF GOT ME THE LICENSES TO RUN THE NIGHT CLUB AND COUNTRY CLUB. I SUPERVISED THE GAMBLING END AND "THE STRUMMER" WATCHED THE POLICY AND LOTTERY DEPARTMENT. THE CHIEF SET HIM UP IN THE TAXI BUSINESS SO HE COULD KEEP TRACK OF THINGS

I'M SUPPOSED TO BE ONE OF THOSE HAIL-FELLOWS-WELL-MET, SO I GO TO THE FRONT. THE CHIEF DIDN'T KEEP A CHECK ON US. HE KNEW WHAT THE RACKET WAS WORTH AND TOOK HIS SAME BIG SLICE EVERY WEEK. HE DIDN'T WANT ANYTHING TO DO WITH THE ACTUAL OPERATION. AT LEAST, THAT'S WHAT HE SAID IN FRONT OF "THE STRUMMER" AND THAT'S WHY "THE STRUMMER" THINKS I'M RUNNING THE WORKS; BUT THE CHIEF NEVER TOOK HIS HAND OUT AND I'VE ALWAYS FOLLOWED HIS ORDERS

THE NAME "UNCLE JOE" WAS "THE STRUMMER'S" IDEA. ANY TIME ANYBODY WOULD STEP OUT OF LINE, THE CHIEF'D LET ME KNOW ABOUT IT AND ORDER A BEATING-UP OR A RIDE. I'D PASS IT ON TO "THE STRUMMER" AS MY ORDERS AND "THE STRUMMER" WOULD TELL THE VICTIM HE WAS IN BAD WITH "UNCLE JOE"... THE NAME STUCK AND HAD A LOT TO DO WITH KEEPING EVERYONE IN LINE

NEXT FOR LOUIS

By Jack Sords

Doubt of his eligibility surrounded his temporary departure from Bristol High in December of 1938. It was charged that he had been absent from school too long a period to remain eligible scholastically. At the same time, they questioned whether or not he had entered at Frankford High school where he had intended going to finish out his senior year.

However, upon finding that he would not be able to graduate in June by taking up his studies at Frankford, Doyle decided to return to Bristol. By that time it was approximately mid-January. But he had missed only about 5 or 6 days of school because Bristol didn't resume classes until January 9, due to lack of heat at the school since the new boilers were being installed at that time. Furthermore a statement from the principal of Frankford High school disclosed that Doyle had not attended any classes at Frankford and therefore, he hadn't transferred his studies from Bristol to Frankford. And by the same reasoning, he was still a student of Bristol High. Mr. Hertzler presented reports showing Doyle's scholastic standings and other papers which further bore out his eligibility.

E. L. Caum, principal of Morrisville High School, who also investigated the case for the committee of which he was a member hearing the charges brought against Bristol, declared that his inquiries into the situation had proven Doyle's eligibility in every way. When put to a vote Doyle was unanimously declared eligible.

In Gallagher's case, it was a question as to his age and whether he had completed his full quota of years of competition in gymnastics. Inquiry as to his age from the bureau of vital statistics at Harrisburg had not been received as yet, but Mr. Hertzler presented baptismal certificate and official school records, both of which proved that Gallagher was not over age.

Concerning the doubt surrounding the question of whether Gallagher had competed in a scheduled gymnastic meet in 1935, Mr. Hertzler presented a letter from coach Max Younger of Temple Frosh's gym team, revealing from their records that Temple Frosh had not met Bristol in gymnastics that year (1935). Local newspaper clippings and stories were also used to back up that statement along with Bristol High's official gymnastic records for that year which were submitted by "Bill" Dougherty who was then head coach at Bristol.

Thought to have been ineligible from the beginning of the season, coach Juenger did not use his ace tumbler in any league meets, but upon persistent efforts to keep Gallagher from participating, coach Juenger decided to investigate his eligibility himself and found that he was eligible. And so he used Gallagher in the District meet under protest of the other four teams of the league. No one was there to prosecute the case for the league. Like Doyle, Gallagher was unanimously declared eligible.

DOES GOOD TURN

MEDICAL LAKE, Wash.—(INS)—Ed Mahon was alive today because his son, 13-year-old Ed, Jr., knew how to use his Boy Scout training. Overcome by carbon monoxide gas when he started his car with the garage doors closed, Mahon was revived by his son, who applied artificial respiration. Doctors said Mahon would have died before they arrived had his son not saved him.
